10PM Weather Forecast

Thursday, August 5, 2021

5 Day Forecast Discussion: Precipitation chances come back into the picture getting into the weekend with continued chances heading into next week. Precipitation chances on FRI, SAT, and SUN look minor as it stands now with only isolated chances (mainly in the afternoon hours for the most part). However, we need to keep an eye on Saturday morning as the latest data is suggesting decaying thunderstorms could survive into Central IN from the west. Otherwise, most of the daytime hours will feature mostly dry conditions and are by no means a washout. Coverage looks to pick up a bit getting into Monday - Tuesday where we'll need to watch for a more widespread threat as a system swings through. Temps will be on the increase as well throughout the weekend with temperatures getting into the low 90's F by SUN/MON and heat indices into the low to mid 90's F.

Thursday, August 5, 2021

Long Range Forecast Discussion & Scenarios: No weather concern into tomorrow morning, but minor chances arrive tomorrow through the weekend. Temperatures will be on the increase as well through the weekend with heat index values approaching close to the mid 90's F by Sunday. Into early next week, scattered hit and miss chances will be possible daily along with an uptick in both temperature and humidity. It seems likely that Heat Index Values in the mid to even upper 90's will be possible early next week as well. As for the rain chances into next week, they currently do not look like washouts, but it does look like a more widespread threat is possible early-mid next week. Especially Tuesday - Thursday below the ensemble data is in better agreement with more aggressive rain/storm risks. That said, we're still several days out so some fine tuning especially in terms of timing will be needed over the weekend. The "extreme values" show the potential if caught under a scattered thunderstorm.
