6PM Synopsis: We are still not anticipating additional storm chances into this evening for the remainder of today's Fair, with the bulk of the storm activity remaining across northern/northwestern Indiana. Although the chances of precipitation overnight tonight through daybreak are on the lower potential, we are still watching for an isolated threat between 2-8AM overnight tonight. As mentioned in the 10AM and 2PM reports, this is not looking like a widespread event and would likely be weakening upon its arrival if it makes it here in Indy. No severe weather is anticipated. Winds are anticipated to be light with a low temperature around 68F expected.

6PM Weather Forecast

Friday, August 6, 2021

5 Day Forecast Discussion: The forecast overall in the short-term continues to trend drier as it gets closer. Upper level high pressure and low level dry air are to thank for that. We will watch for a decaying area of storms Saturday pre-dawn to the north/northeast of Indy, but as of right now we're taking out the storm chances for Sunday. Perhaps a better shot of scattered storms early next week with daily chances of pop-up storms, scattered in nature. There is some potential that there could be a strong storm threat mid-week (WED/THURS), amidst a Northwest Flow aloft favorable for strong storm cluster potential. This is still several days out so we will fine-tune in the days to come.

Long Range Forecast Discussion & Scenarios: Temperatures will be on the increase as we head into the weekend, with heat index values approaching close to the mid 90's F by Sunday. Into early next week, scattered, hit and miss rain chances will be possible on the daily, along with an uptick in both temperatures and humidity for a few days next week. It seems likely that heat index values in the mid to even upper 90's F will be possible early next week as well. As for the rain chances into next week, the storm chances look to be hit and miss, mainly during the afternoon and evening hours. The next POSSIBLE organized (strong?) storm threat would come with another cold front late next week into the weekend. This would also bring cooler air band into the forecast.
