Tropical Update:

European Ensemble Tracks

The Gulf tropical activity will remain inactive over the next several days as Henri impacts the Northeast US. While there is certainly no immediate threat, we are keeping an eye on the potential of a tropical wave to develop near the Yucatan Peninsula ~7 days from now. There are far more questions than answers at this point and there are several pieces of data that have nothing developing, but it is at least something to monitor. Any development of a wave likely happens in the August ~29-31 window.

Short-Term Forecast Discussion

Today is anticipated to be dry across the area.

- Winds near daybreak turn a bit more out of the WNW as higher pressure moves overhead. Winds also are likely a bit variable given the high pressure moving through the area and generally lighter (5-10 MPH). Come late afternoon, winds pick up a bit to 8-13 MPH sustained and will be coming out of the SSE.
- Temps once again will be in the lower to mid 90s with feels like temps topping out in the mid to upper 100s.
 - No fog is expected today into tonight.

Long-Range Forecast Discussion

- A quieter next few days are expected until THU when better Gulf Moisture works back towards the HOU area. A lot of the moisture risk will pend on how any tropical disturbance evolves, but nonetheless, a more active stretch of weather towards next weekend is anticipated. Temperatures look to run slightly above normal.
- We will need to keep a close eye on a tropical system in the week 2 timeframe. More discussion on slide 2.
- Into mid September, temperatures and precipitation are expected to average out to near normal although there can be some up and downs at times. The overall risk would be that of slightly cooler and slightly wetter vs normal.
